History of Rutgers University

Rutgers University is located at New Brunswick, New Jersey, a town of about 35,000 inhabitants, thirty miles from New York City and sixty miles from Philadelphia.

Rutgers University was founded as Queen's College on November 10, 1766, by charter granted in the name of George III of England. In 1825, the name was changed to Rutgers College, in recognition of the benevolent donations of Colonel Henry Rutgers, a prominent citizen of New York; and in June, 1924, the trustees approved the adoption of the title "Rutgers University."

In 1864, the State of New Jersey designated the Scientific School of Rutgers College as "The State College for the Benefit of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts." In 1917, the New Jersey Legislature approved this institution also as the State University of New Jersey.

The campus, including the College Farm and the College for Women, comprises approximately 1350 acres. Grounds and buildings owned by the University are valued at more than $14,000,000. The University is supported by endowment and appropriation from the State of New Jersey.

In the academic year 1940-41, there were 1705 undergraduate students in attendance in the colleges for men, and 1020 in the College for Women.

The oldest and principal center of Rutgers University is Queen's Campus. Old Queen's, the central building, was erected in 1808-09. The other campi are: Neilson Campus, Bishop Campus, The College Farm, College Field, River Road Campus, The New Jersey College for Women, and the New Jersey College of Pharmacy.

College Field, on College Avenue, is the site of the first intercollegiate football game in America, played between Princeton and Rutgers on November 6, 1869, and won by Rutgers six goals to four. The Rutgers University Gymnasium, completed in 1931, containing offices for the departments of Physical Education and Military Science and Tactics, is located here. The gymnasium provides adequate facilities for all forms of indoor athletics.

River Road Campus contains a nine-hole golf course, seven athletic fields, and a stadium. This stadium was dedicated in 1938 at the 68th Princeton-Rutgers football game.

The Rutgers University Library contains 309,728 volumes and more than 150,000 manuscripts, maps, and pamphlets, and receives approximately 750 periodicals.

Among the prominent collections owned by Rutgers University are the Geological Museum, the Zoological Museum, the Hulst and Smith Collections of Lepidoptera, and the James B. Laing Collections of rare coins.

The Rutgers University Band

The Rutgers University Band, composed of fifty-five college men of all classes, and of many ages and interests, is, unlike many college bands, a curricular activity. Mr. Miller, the bandmaster, is a retired army warrant officer. He is assisted by four student leaders, seniors. The present elected officers of the Band are, Joe Lieb, '41, President; Hal Gerber, '42, Vice President; Frank Johnson, '44, Secretary; and Drew Thomas, '42, Manager. The Band plays classical and semi-classical music, as well as marches, popular pieces, and patriotic airs. It is supported in the following ways:

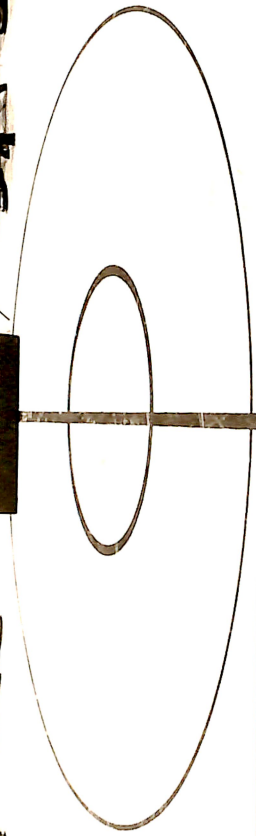

The military uniforms are supplied and cared for by the Military Department; the uniforms for sport occasions, furnished by the University Administration; the Student Council finances football trips, and the annual concert and dance provides an operating fund for the Band.

Regarding the work done by the Band. During football season, at games and pep rallies, of course, the Band functions. When the Rutgers R. O. T. C. unit parades, and at Government Inspection, the Band is the Military Band. At Agricultural Field Day, during Prep School Weekend, at the President's Garden Party, and during Parents' Day, at academic convocations, and on Military Field Day, the Band efficiently performs its duties.
